

recently contained a strong policy of intervention in the world. It arrives at this conclusion from a study of the rivalries of empires and empires; it sees in the great efforts of the past century nothing but "suicidal dissolution, murder, and rapine glowingly portrayed as 'heroic warlike aptitude.'" It says have convinced all Europe of the wisdom of their Government and the wisdom of their enterprise," and, with sublime magnanimity, Lindley's motion in the House was unadvisable or premature. Magnanimity either, for in the House the cockney scoundrel says involves immediate recognition, prevention, and contingent war." Soon why this blatant defender of his darling wish "to open the doors to all," and deliberately calculate the experiment in money and cowardice is hidden beneath the statement "Is recognition of any particular State or districts would amount to a biased adjudication of the situation." It argues that South Alabama, if they had joined new compact to the neighbors, might fairly urge that they dependent existence both in fact and it seems so difficult in defining it, just as if the foreign adjacency on a parallel of latitude course of the Ohio river was not authorized, impudent, and disastrous is that the giant preparations of the United States and which our people have exhibited in emergency by physical, mechanical aid, have paralyzed the story of England, and John Bull pining mixture of abject fear and consummation, that there is also the gift and loss, as well as the claim in England's history did just scale of the balance when profit in the other: The distress of her

How the scale dips again in weight of territorial rule, while land and commerce are regarded as dead. On the whole, then, comes to the wise conclusion that should cheaper to buy cotton at the than to pay for it by two or three-fifths by years of ineffectual war." Precisely so. Let John Ball give sharp point upward, that an acture may serve as a grade re-bate but one more reference to article of the Review. It says in
